OUR VIEW OF THE MARKET

As you are all aware of, the public markets, which were the best performing are declining in worrying rates.

The most immediate effect is on recent IPOs that became the worst performing assets. As an example, Monday which debuted on NASDAQ on June at $5.8B, was worth at peak (Nov 21.) almost $20B with revenues of $83M in a quarter, which means X60 on revenues. This week the company was evaluated at $4.5B with last quarterly revenue reported of $108M. Now the company is traded at X10 multiply which considered to be many investors the highest bar for excellent SaaS companies.

Investors are currently reassessing valuations and as a result multiplies that use to be very high are now for many companies at a lower point than they were before the CoVid started.

This of course, affects all rounds of financing. In addition, the IPO market is seem to be a distant option for now and investors will not be able to liquidate their investments in the near future.

The market is now focusing on profitability, which is a major shift from the growth strategy that most VCs and PEs were focusing on.

As for Stardom Ventures - we are working closely with our portfolio companies to secure a run-rate of at least 24 months, either through external/SAFE rounds or by focusing more on capital efficiency rather than growth.

Notwithstanding the fact that we had a good quarter, we are making every effort to secure the resilience of our portfolio companies.

We will keep updating about the progress of our portfolio companies.
