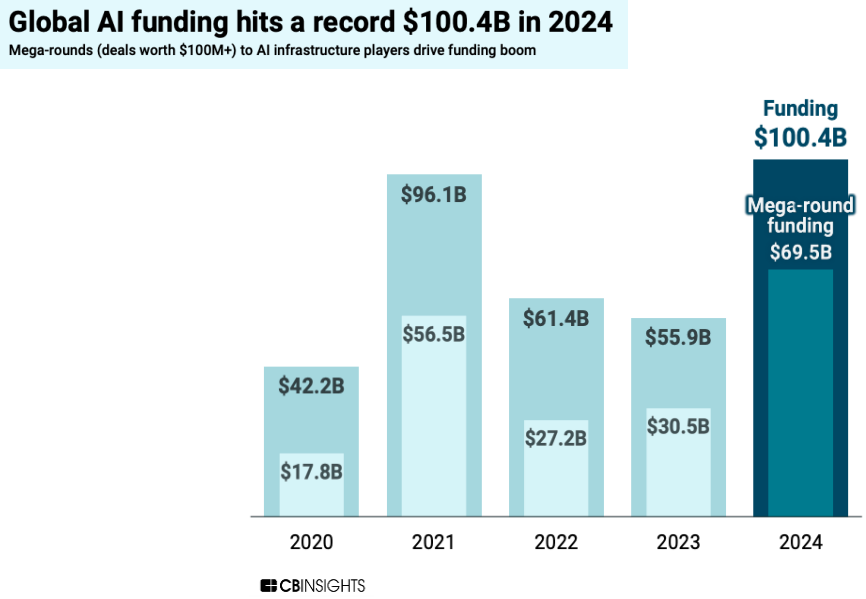
OUR VIEW OF THE MARKET

2024 Summary: The Year of AI

The 2024 venture capital market found stability after the steep declines of 2023, with no further downturns and early signs of recovery. Despite challenges, early-stage funding remained highly competitive, with seed valuations rebounding to their 2022 peak, while Series A and B valuations saw significant increases.

AI continues to dominate the narrative—and the pitch decks. In 2024, AI represented 37% of venture funding and 17% of deals — both all-time highs. AI infrastructure players raised all of the top 5 venture deals of the year, with 4 closing in Q4'24 alone.



While the US dominated AI funding (76%) and deals (49%) in 2024, countries in Europe show strong potential in AI development based on CB Insights Mosaic startup health scores. Israel leads with the highest median Mosaic score (700) among AI companies raising funding.

Country	Median Mosaic score (out of 1,000)	Number of companies
Israel	700	72
Sweden	650	35
Singapore	650	72
France	645	92
Australia	640	39
United Kingdom	630	243
Switzerland	630	45
Germany	630	106
Spain	615	38
Italy	605	37

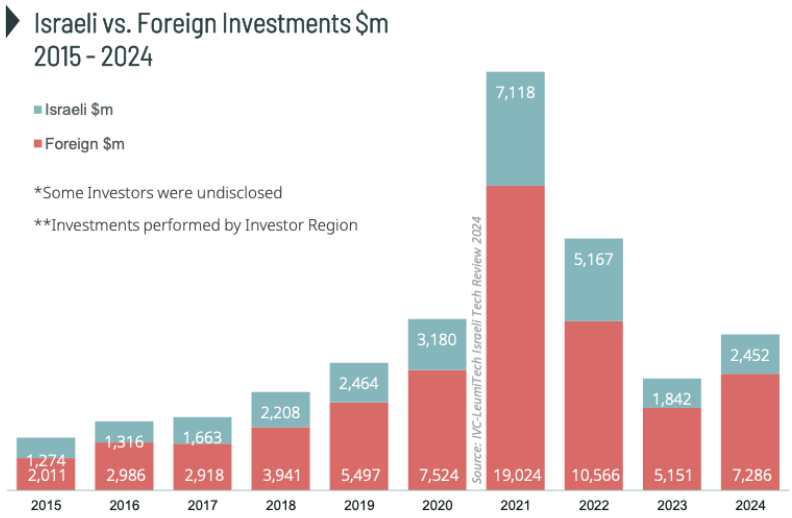
Israeli Tech in 2024: Resilience, Recovery, and Record Growth

2024 was a transformational year for the Israeli tech ecosystem, marked by strong investment momentum, heightened M&A activity, and renewed global confidence in Israeli innovation. Despite geopolitical uncertainties, the tech sector rebounded sharply, with $9.6 billion raised across 453 deals, reflecting a 39% year-over-year (YoY) increase in capital deployment and a 15% rise in deal count.

The region saw progress toward de-escalation, with a ceasefire, hostage returns from Gaza, and a U.S.-backed agreement with Lebanon. These developments provided much-needed stability, creating a tailwind for tech investments, and setting the stage for further economic and business normalization in 2025.

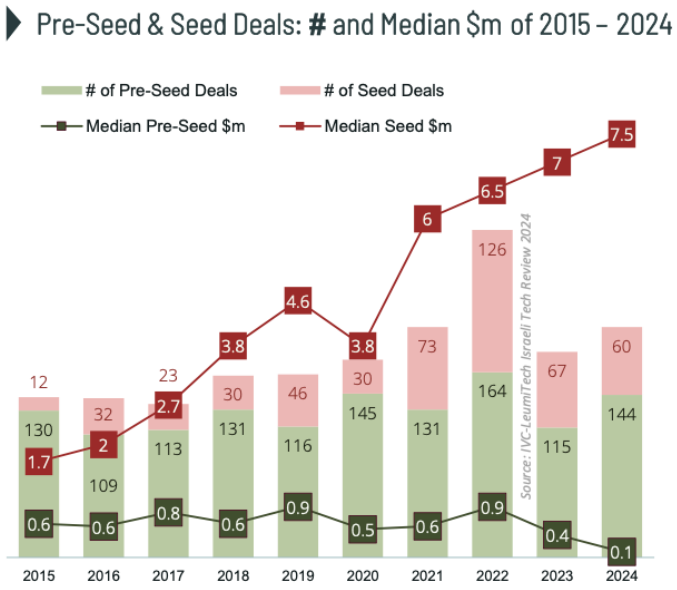
This resurgence was fueled by:

1. Strong investor appetite for Generative AI, cybersecurity, and deep tech.
2. An influx of foreign capital, surpassing local investments in both volume and deal size.
3. Late-stage fundraising, with 25 unicorns securing $4.4 billion, doubling the amount raised by a comparable cohort in 2023.



M&A activity surged, reaching $16 billion across 40 major deals, with key transactions such as Salesforce's $1.9 billion acquisition of Own Data Company and Nvidia's purchases of Run.ai and Deci for a combined $1 billion.

2024 was also a strong year for startup growth, with seven Israeli high-tech companies crossing the threshold to join the unicorn club. While this was not enough to create a major shift in the industry, it was still an improvement over 2023. Early-stage startups benefitted from increasing investor confidence, with 144 pre-seed deals recorded, marking a 25% increase from 2023.



Outlook for 2025

Given the strong recovery in investment levels and M&A activity, the outlook for 2025 appears highly promising. Israeli high-tech firms are expected to continue attracting substantial foreign investment. Additionally, stabilizing geopolitical conditions will likely boost investor sentiment further, setting 2025 up for another year of growth and expansion.

Our Portfolio of Companies

We are very positive about 2025. There are several portfolio companies that are growing in an impressive pace either in revenues or in user traction and we expect that at least one portfolio company will raise an up round in H1 2025. Our main goal for this year is to assist our companies in achieving their fundraising goal and we look forward to see some results during this year.
