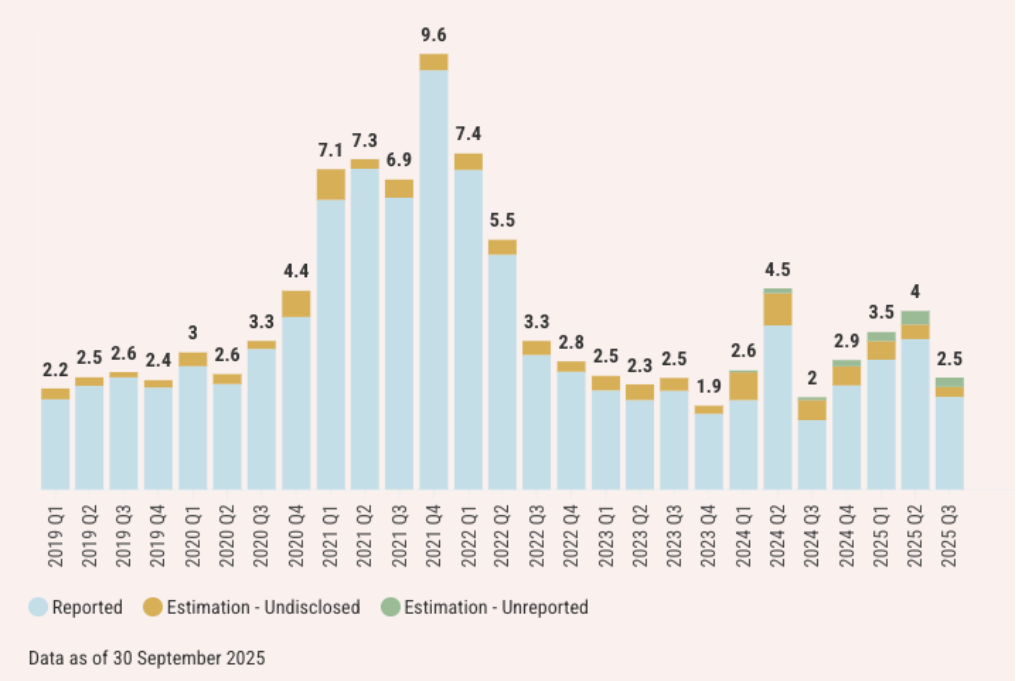
OUR VIEW OF THE MARKET

Israeli view:

Although Q3 traditionally slows due to the holiday season and summer break, the Israeli tech sector continued to show resilience and consistency. Across fundraising, M&A, and public market activity, the data indicates that 2025 has maintained a stable upward trajectory. Performance during the first nine months reflects a market that has regained confidence and is gradually strengthening.

Activity in Q3 2025 remained solid, with capital deployment more balanced than in the previous two years - a sign of growing trust on both the investor and founder sides. Israeli companies raised $2.5B through 155 reported deals, with real activity estimated closer to $3B once undisclosed Seed rounds are accounted for, making it one of the stronger third quarters in recent years.

Quarterly Market Activity Overview (2019–2025):



Source: SNC

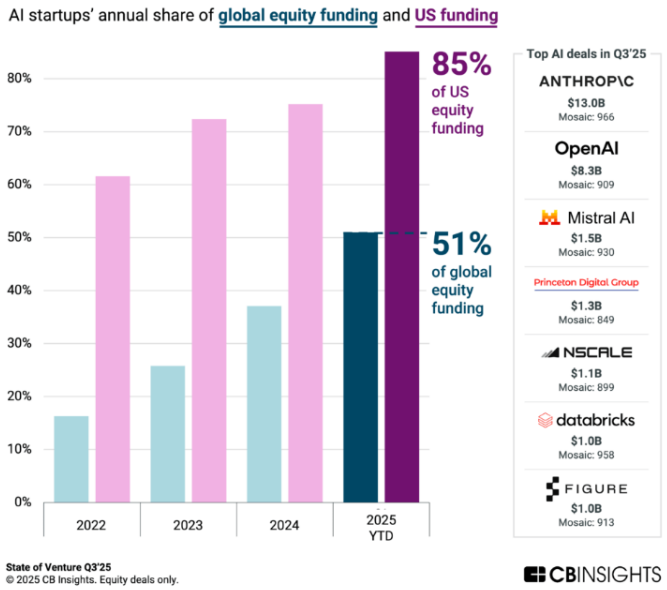
A standout trend this quarter was the return of larger Seed rounds: six Seed financings above $20M, a level rarely seen in previous periods. This spike pushed the median Seed round value to an exceptionally high figure for Q3. At the same time, the broader ecosystem is clearly maturing: fewer but larger rounds, more disciplined capital, and a continued shift toward companies with proven commercial traction and operational excellence.

Taken together, Q3 2025 underscores an ecosystem moving confidently into its scale-up era. Investors are prioritizing quality, founders are building more efficiently, and global acquirers are validating the market with significant transactions. Israel's high-tech industry remains a core engine of growth - not only for the local economy but increasingly for a region that is rapidly modernizing through technology.

Global AI view:

AI continued to be the strongest force in global venture capital in Q3 2025. Funding into AI companies remained elevated, with AI capturing a substantial share of both total investment dollars and deal volume.

AI is on track to capture over 50% of total annual venture funding for the first time.



In Stardom's domain:

- AI remains the defining investment theme, shaping every adjacent sector we care about: media-tech, gaming, commerce, creator tools.
- Applied AI is now investable at Seed, with clear early revenue opportunities and much shorter build cycles.
- Media, eCommerce, and entertainment are entering an AI-native era, in which automation, personalization, and synthetic media create deeply defensible business models.
- Creator commerce and gaming are in a reinvention phase, moving from content platforms to AI-powered production and monetization systems - directly aligned with Stardom's thesis.

Portfolio summary:

Our portfolio continues to show strong momentum, with several companies hitting record performance milestones. Three portfolio companies have now crossed $10M in ARR, reflecting both sustained growth and solid execution across the board. Based on current trajectories, we expect 2025 to close with strong results for the portfolio.
